

Due to the game i'm working on going live with a new major update i was doing badly on time so i am using the 1v1 puck game i had in game design class on friday as it translates perfectly into a game played only by mouse.

It's a vs game that combines air hockey, pool and maybe a bit of curling. It is played on a board with 3 segments, middle line, and player 1,2 home lines. Both players have a puck and there are 5 target pucks on the middle line. The goal is to get % of the targets across the opponents home lines. Game is played in turns with extra turns awarded to the active player for hitting a target across the line (must be wholly within opponent side). The opposing player is awarded an extra turn if in any way the active player moves opponents puck during their turn.

1. Both players place their pucks anywhere behind their home lines.
2. Coin flip to see who starts.
3. Starting player clicks on their puck and drags with mouse to adjust strength of the flick. A line appears between the puck and cursor, showing where the flick will connect and indicating by color the strength of the flick.
4. Starting player connects to a target and manages to send a target across the opponents line. Unfortunately the opponents puck was also hit.
5. Opponents starts with an extra turn and flicks carefully the puck to the side, not connecting to any target.
6. Opponent takes extra turn, connecting to a target, advancing it up the board.
7. Starting player takes their turn and flicks their puck back to their side.
8. Opponents sends a target across starting players line and takes an extra turn to better position their puck towards their side.
9. Starting player sends a target across opponents line, their puck slides back enough to hit another target with their extra turn it ends on opponents home line.
10. Opponent tries to disrupt starting player puck and hits it across their home line.
11. Starting player with an extra turn carefully sends their puck back to the middle field and then hits a target so it sends the previous target on opponents line with itself across opponents home line and wind the game.
